UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT DISTRICT OF NEVADA

Fabian Fuentes Rosas

3:05-cv-00490-RCJ-VPC

Petitioner

Order of Dismissal

v.

[ECF No. 110]

E.K. McDaniel, et al.,

Respondents

Petitioner Fabian Fuentes Rosas, a prisoner in the custody of the State of Nevada, brings this habeas action under 28 U.S.C. § 2254 to challenge his 2000 Nevada state convictions resulting from a double homicide at a Domino's Pizza store. (ECF No. 68). After evaluating his claims on the merits, I deny Rosas's petition for a writ of habeas corpus, dismiss this action with prejudice, and deny a certificate of appealability.

Background

Just past midnight on May 24, 1997, a man walked into a Domino's Pizza store in Elko, Nevada, and shot two employees. Later investigation revealed that roughly $400 was missing from the register, but that some cash was left behind.

Rosas was indicted on July 13, 1999 for the murders and related conduct. (Exhibit 199).¹ On ¹ The exhibits referenced in this order are found in the Court's record at ECF Nos. 12-16 (Exhibits 1-189), ECF No. 33 (Supplemental Exhibits 190-202), and ECF Nos. 64-65 (Exhibits 203-256).

1 September 18, 2000, Rosas was found guilty following a jury trial of two counts of murder in the 2 first degree with the use of a deadly weapon, one count of conspiracy to commit murder, one count
3 of robbery with the use of a deadly weapon, and one count of conspiracy to violate the Uniform 4 Controlled Substances Act. (Exhibit 18, at 2–3). He was sentenced to multiple consecutive 5 sentences of life in prison without the possibility of parole, in addition to other consecutive 6 sentences. (See id. at 4).

7 Rosas appealed, and the Nevada Supreme Court affirmed on December 17, 2001. (Exhibit 8 138). Following a petition for rehearing, an amended affirmance was filed on May 10, 2002.
9 (Exhibit 140). On August 7, 2002, Rosas mailed a state petition for a writ of habeas corpus, and it 10 was denied on June 24, 2003. (Exhibit 147; Exhibit 172).

11 Rosas then filed a pro se habeas action in federal court under 28 U.S.C. § 2254. (ECF No. 7).
12 Following appointment of counsel, (see ECF No. 22), Rosas filed a First Amended Petition for a 13 Writ of Habeas Corpus on November 20, 2006. (ECF No. 32). On September 16, 2008, in response 14 to challenges raised by the State, this Court granted a stay of to allow Rosas to further pursue and 15 exhaust claims for post-conviction relief in state court. (ECF No. 61).

16 Rosas filed a second state petition for habeas relief on November 3, 2008. (Exhibit 203). It 17 was denied on February 1, 2011. (Exhibit 237 (proposed findings); Exhibit 240 (adopting the 18 proposed findings)). Rosas appealed, and the Nevada Supreme Court affirmed. (Exhibit 247).
19 Remittitur issued on March 4, 2013. (Exhibit 255).

20 Rosas then returned to this Court and filed a motion to reopen on April 17, 2013 and to file a 21 second amended petition. (ECF No. 63). This Court granted the motion. (ECF No. 67). Rosas filed
22 his Second Amended Petition for a Writ of Habeas Corpus. (ECF No. 68). The Second Amended 23 Petition raised ten grounds for relief:

24 Ground One: Rosas was denied his rights to due process of law and a fair trial under 25 the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment[s] when the State prosecuted him for the 26 Domino's murders in breach of the plea agreement precluding such prosecutions.
(ECF No. 68, at 14–22).

27 Ground Two: Rosas was denied his rights to due process of law and a fair trial under 28 the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments when the district court denied his motion to

1 dismiss the case on the grounds that the State was precluded from prosecuting Rosas 2 due to a prior negotiated plea/polygraph agreement. (ECF No. 68, at 22–31).

3 Ground Three: Rosas was denied his rights to due process of law and a fair trial under 4 the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution when the 5 prosecutor raised and impeached an alibi defense in his case in chief, thereby 6 improperly shifting the burden of proof to the defendant. (ECF No. 68, at 31–34).

7 Ground Four: Rosas was denied his right to the effective assistance of appellate 8 counsel under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States 9 Constitution when counsel failed to [challenge] the prosecution's use of a peremptory 10 challenge to exclude a Hispanic from serving on the jury in violation of Batson v.
11 Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79 (1986). (ECF No. 68, at 34–38).

12 Ground Five: Rosas was denied his right to the effective assistance of trial counsel 13 under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution when 14 counsel failed to move for a change of venue after a prospective juror informed the 15 court and counsel that Elko, Nevada's white and Mexican communities were racially 16 split as to Rosas' guilt of the crimes charged, the former favoring convictions and the 17 latter acquittals. (ECF No. 68, at 38–40).

18 Ground Six: Rosas was denied his right to the effective assistance of trial counsel
19 under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution when 20 counsel failed to investigate (1) a leading suspect in the killings and (2) a witness who 21 could have impeached Liana Marie Barraza, and therefore, failed to prepare a 22 meaningful defense. (ECF No. 68, at 40–43).

23 Ground Seven: The State's failure to disclose (1) the prosecution of J.J. Arnold 24 Horner as an ex-felon in possession of a 9mm pistol during the summer of 1997, and 25 its consequent seizure of such 9mm pistol and destruction thereof at closure of the 26 case and (2) the investigation of Horner for stealing dynamite and threatening various 27 persons and institutions with it denied Rosas his rights to due process of law and a 28 fair trial under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. (ECF No. 68, at 43–44).

Ground Eight: Admission of prior bad act testimony violated petitioner's constitutional rights to a fair trial and due process of law under the Fifth, Sixth, and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. (ECF No. 68, at 44–47).

Ground Nine: Rosas was denied his due process rights under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution because there was insufficient evidence presented at trial to support a finding of guilt of the crimes charged beyond a reasonable doubt. (ECF No. 68, at 47–49).

Ground Ten: Rosas was denied his right to the effective assistance of trial counsel
under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution when counsel failed to object to the joinder of the controlled substances conspiracy charge (Count 9) with the previous eight counts concerning the Domino's Pizza killings.
(ECF No. 68, at 49–50).

The State moved to dismiss the Second Amended Petition. (ECF No. 78). The State argued

1 that a number of claims had not been exhausted in state court, were untimely because they did not 2 relate back, or were procedurally barred because they were procedurally defaulted in state court.

3 This Court rejected the first two of these arguments, holding that Ground Eight had been 4 exhausted in state court and that Grounds Five, Seven, Eight, and Ten were not untimely. (ECF No.
5 86, at 8). Addressing the State's final argument, this Court held:

6 Because Grounds One, Two, Five, Six, Seven, and Ten of the second amended federal 7 habeas petition assert the same claims made in the procedurally defaulted state court 8 habeas petition, these claims are procedurally barred from federal review and will be 9 dismissed with prejudice unless petitioner can show cause and prejudice to excuse the 10 procedural bar, or that this Court's failure to consider the defaulted claims will result 11 in a fundamental miscarriage of justice.

12 The Court has determined that the analysis of cause and prejudice arguments in this 13 case are closely related to the analysis on the merits of the case. Therefore, the Court 14 will defer on ruling on [the] cause and prejudice issue until the merits are fully 15 briefed.

16 (Id. at 10–11).

17 The State filed its Second Amended Answer. (ECF No. 94). Rosas filed his Second 18 Amended Reply. (ECF No. 103).

19 Standard of review

20 When a state court has adjudicated a claim on the merits, the Antiterrorism and Effective
21 Death Penalty Act (AEDPA) imposes a “highly deferential” standard for evaluating the state court 22 ruling that is “difficult to meet” and “which demands that state-court decisions be given the benefit 23 of the doubt.” Cullen v. Pinholster, 563 U.S. 170 (2011). Under this highly deferential standard of 24 review, a federal court may not grant habeas relief merely because it might conclude that the state
25 court decision was incorrect. Id. at 202. Instead, under 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d), the court may grant 26 relief only if the state court decision: (1) was either contrary to or involved an unreasonable 27 application of clearly established law as determined by the United States Supreme Court or (2) was 28 based on an unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented at the state court proceeding. Id. at 181–88. The petitioner bears the burden of proof. Id. at 181.

A state court decision is “contrary to” law clearly established by the Supreme Court only if it applies a rule that contradicts the governing law set forth in Supreme Court case law or if the

1 decision confronts a set of facts that are materially indistinguishable from a Supreme Court decision
2 and nevertheless arrives at a different result. See, e.g., Mitchell v. Esparza, 540 U.S. 12, 15–16
3 (2003). A state court decision is not contrary to established federal law merely because it does not 4 cite the Supreme Court’s opinions. Id. The Supreme Court has held that a state court need not even 5 be aware of its precedents, so long as neither the reasoning nor the result of its decision contradicts 6 them. Id. And “a federal court may not overrule a state court for simply holding a view different 7 from its own, when the precedent from [the Supreme] Court is, at best, ambiguous.” Id. at 16. A 8 decision that does not conflict with the reasoning or holdings of Supreme Court precedent is not 9 contrary to clearly established federal law.

10 A state court decision constitutes an “unreasonable application” of clearly established federal 11 law only if it is demonstrated that the state court’s application of Supreme Court precedent to the 12 facts of the case was not only incorrect but “objectively unreasonable.” See, e.g., id. at 18; Davis v.
13 Woodford, 384 F.3d 628, 638 (9th Cir. 2004). When a state court’s factual findings based on the 14 record before it are challenged, the “unreasonable determination of fact” clause of 28 U.S.C.
15 § 2254(d)(2) controls, which requires federal courts to be “particularly deferential” to state court 16 factual determinations. See, e.g., Lambert v. Blodgett, 393 F.3d 943, 972 (9th Cir. 2004). This 17 standard is not satisfied by a mere showing that the state court finding was “clearly erroneous.” Id. at 18 973. Rather, AEDPA requires substantially more deference:

19 [I]n concluding that a state-court finding is unsupported by substantial 20 evidence in the state-court record, it is not enough that we would 21 reverse in similar circumstances if this were an appeal from a district 22 court decision. Rather, we must be convinced that an appellate panel, applying the normal standards of appellate review, could not reasonably conclude that the finding is supported by the record.
Taylor v. Maddox, 366 F.3d 992, 1000 (9th Cir. 2004); see also Lambert, 393 F.3d at 972.

23 Under 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(1), state court’s factual findings are presumed to be correct and 24 the petitioner must rebut that presumption by “clear and convincing evidence.” In this inquiry, 25 federal courts may not look to any factual basis not developed before the state court unless the 26 petitioner both shows that the claim relies on either (a) “a new rule of constitutional law, made 27 retroactive to cases on collateral review by the Supreme Court, that was previously unavailable” or

1 (b) “a factual predicate that could not have been previously discovered through the exercise of due 2 diligence” and shows that “the facts underlying the claim would be sufficient to establish by clear 3 and convincing evidence that but for constitutional error, no reasonable factfinder would have found 4 the applicant guilty of the underlying offense.” 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(2).

5 Discussion

6 A. Ground 1

7 In Ground 1, Rosas argues that he “was denied his rights to due process of law and a fair trial
8 under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment[s] when the State prosecuted him for the Domino’s 9 murders in breach of the plea agreement precluding such prosecutions.” (ECF No. 68, at 14).
10 Sometime prior to August 21, 1997, Rosas was charged with three drug felonies. After that, 11 Woodbury, the Elko County District Attorney, approached Leeds, Chief Deputy Elko County Public
12 Defender, about whether Rosas would take a polygraph examination concerning Rosas’s 13 involvement in or knowledge of the Domino’s homicides. Rosas, assisted by Leeds, reached and 14 signed the following “Agreement to Take Polygraph Examination”:

15 I, (Fabian Rosas) after consulting with my attorney, Frederick H. Leeds, have 16 agreed to take a polygraph examination with respect to the Domino’s killings. Mr.
17 Leeds has advised me that I do not have to take this examination and I am doing so freely and voluntarily.

18 I have been advised that if I take the examination and it shows that I am not involved in the Domino’s killing; the Elko County District Attorney’s Office has 19 agreed to file no further charges and take no further prosecutorial actions with regard to the charges that I am currently facing.

20 Lastly, under no circumstances may the results of, or the fact that a polygraph examination was administered, be referred to in any subsequent prosecution, without subsequent written approval of all parties signatory to this agreement.

21 (Exhibit 202 (as in original)). The agreement was signed by Rosas, Leeds, and Woodbury. (Id.).
22

23 Two years later, in 1999, the district attorney’s office brought the homicide charges. Rosas 24 claimed that doing so was in violation of the polygraph agreement, and it became an issue for the 25 trial court in July 2000. On July 25, 2000, Woodbury signed a declaration that “[t]here was no 26 written memorandum.” (Exhibit 42, at 6). Two days later, Woodbury cross-examined Leeds about 27 the agreement:
28

1 Q: The fact is the agreement that you think we reached was never reduce to writing?
2 A: That's correct, it wasn't.
3 Q: And did you take any notes?
4 A: That's—well, let me think about that. I didn't take any notes with respect to what?
5 Q: This negotiation that you say you and I had.
6 A: That's correct.
7 Q: And I didn't take any notes?
8 ...
9 A: ... I didn't see you take any notes.

6 (Exhibit 45C, at 88). In answering Rosas's appeal of his convictions, the State again relied on 7 Woodbury's affidavit and the testimony he elicited from Leeds. (See Exhibit 134, at 3–5).

8 When Odiaga raised this Ground to the Nevada Supreme Court, the court held that the 9 petition was procedurally barred, untimely, and an abuse of the writ. (Exhibit 247). This Court then 10 held that Ground 1 was procedurally defaulted based on independent and adequate state grounds, and 11 that, after the merits issues were fully briefed, it would be “dismissed with prejudice unless 12 petitioner can show cause and prejudice to excuse the procedural bar, or that this Court's failure to 13 consider the defaulted claims will result in a fundamental miscarriage of justice.” (ECF No. 86, at 14 10).

15 This standard comes from Supreme Court case law. The Supreme Court has held that, to 16 overcome a claim that was procedurally defaulted in state court, a petitioner must establish cause for 17 the default and prejudice attributable thereto. Harris v. Reed, 489 U.S. 255, 262 (1989).²

18 To demonstrate cause for a procedural default, the petitioner must “show that some objective 19 factor external to the defense impeded” his efforts to comply with the state procedural rule. Murray
20 v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 488 (1986). The external impediment must have prevented the petitioner 21 from raising the claim. See McClesky v. Zant, 499 U.S. 467, 497 (1991). If the petitioner fails to 22 show cause, the court need not consider whether the petitioner suffered actual prejudice. Engle v.
23 Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 134 n.43 (1982); Roberts v. Arave, 847 F.2d 528, 530 n.3 (9th Cir. 1988). With 24 ² Under Harris, a petition could also show that not reviewing the state court's error would result in a 25 “fundamental miscarriage of justice.” Harris, 489 U.S. at 262 (citations omitted). This standard is met 26 only if the petitioner shows it more likely than not that he is “actually innocent.” Bousley v. United 27 States, 523 U.S. 614, 623 (1998) (citing Murray, 477 U.S. at 496). Rosas does not argue that he falls 28 under this exception to overcome his procedural defaults. Even if he did, such an argument would fail for the same reason that Ground 9 fails.

1 respect to the prejudice prong, the petitioner bears “the burden of showing not merely that the errors 2 [complained of] constituted a possibility of prejudice, but that they worked to his actual and 3 substantial disadvantage, infecting his entire [proceeding] with errors of constitutional dimension.”
4 White v. Lewis, 874 F.2d 599, 603 (9th Cir. 1989) (citing United States v. Frady, 456 U.S. 152, 170 5 (1982)).

6 Rosas argues that the actions, described above, of the state officials in creating the belief that 7 the polygraph agreement was never reduced to writing constituted cause to excuse Rosas’s failure to 8 provide the polygraph agreement. (See ECF No. 103, at 14–20).³ The Supreme Court has held that a 9 qualifying objective factor that constitutes cause is “‘interference by officials’ that makes compliance 10 with the State’s procedural rules impracticable.” McClesky, 499 U.S. at 493 (quoting Murray, 477 11 U.S. at 488).

12 Before addressing that argument, though, this must first address the nearly two-year wait 13 between Rosas finding the written agreement and raising it to the Nevada state courts. That wait was 14 not attributable to the state officials’ actions, or any external impediment at all. Rosas contends that 15 cause exists here because the written agreement was found while he was in the midst of federal 16 habeas proceedings. But that is not “interference by officials.” That was a choice. In fact, the 17 Nevada Supreme Court has made clear that “the pursuit of federal remedies does not constitute good 18 cause.” Flanagan v. State, No. 63703, 2016 WL 4005696, at *1 (Nev. July 22, 2016) (unpublished); 19 see Colley v. State, 773 P.2d 1229, 1230 (Nev. 1989), superseded by statute on other grounds as 20 recognized in Flanagan, 2016 WL 4005696.

21 Moreover, even if this Court were to look only at the time between the entry of judgment in 22 the case and the finding of the written agreement, there would be insufficient cause. The officials 23 here did not destroy any evidence; instead the lower state court found that the state officials—much 24 like Rosas’s own attorneys—simply forgot that the agreement had been reduced to writing. Indeed,

25 ³ Rosas also argues that the procedural default rule applied by the Nevada Supreme Court does not meet 26 the “adequate and independent state grounds” test. (See ECF No. 103, at 20–27). But this Court already 27 decided that it does, and that the only out for Rosas was falling into one of AEDPA’s two exceptions.
(See ECF No. 86, at 10).

1 Rosas and Rosas's current attorney both signed the document and thus should have known that it had 2 been reduced to writing and Rosas's former attorney had the original document in its case file for 3 one of the three previous drug cases out of which the polygraph agreement arose. While compliance
4 with the State's procedural rules might have been slightly hampered by the state officials' actions, it 5 was not rendered "impracticable."

6 Therefore, Rosas had not demonstrated "cause" to overcome the procedural default, and 7 Ground 1 provides no basis for habeas relief.

8 B. Ground 2

9 In Ground 2, Rosas argued that he "was denied his rights to due process of law and a fair trial 10 under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments when the district court denied his motion to dismiss the 11 case on the grounds that the State was precluded from prosecuting Rosas due to a prior negotiated 12 plea/polygraph agreement." (ECF No. 68, at 22). Ground 2 is effectively the same as Ground 1, 13 minus the exhibits (190, 191, 198, 199, and 202) that led this Court to find that Ground 1 was 14 unexhausted—thus, it is the same claim that was decided on the merits by the Nevada Supreme 15 court. (ECF No. 103, at 65). So, Rosas says, "This Court has never found Ground Two of the 16 Second Amended Petition to be procedurally defaulted." (Id.). But this Court has. Indeed, it wrote:
17 "Ground[] . . . Two . . . of the second amended federal habeas petition . . . [is] procedurally barred 18 from federal review" (ECF No. 86, at 10). And the reason for that is clear: notwithstanding the 19 mental gymnastics that Rosas tries to put this Court through, Ground Two, in Rosas's own words, 20 relies on "the existence of the [polygraph] agreement [being] added to the equation." (ECF No. 103, 21 at 67–68).

22 But even overlooking this procedural default would not give Rosas any shelter. Rosas 23 argues, in the alternative, that the Nevada Supreme Court "violate[d] 2254(d)(2) because it is based 24 on an unreasonable determination of fact—the lack of an agreement. There is no question the 25 agreement did in fact exist" (Id.). The only reason that there is now no question that the 26 agreement did in fact exist is that we have the written copy of it. But evidence not presented before 27 the state court cannot be used to bolster an argument that the state court made an unreasonable 28

1 interpretation of fact under § 2254(d)(2). Taylor v. Maddox, 366 F.3d 992, 1000 (9th Cir. 2004).
2 Without this written agreement, Rosas does not even try to argue that the Nevada Supreme Court's 3 factual determination that there was not agreement to not prosecute Rosas was unreasonable. For 4 good reason, too. Such an argument fails because the determination, based on the evidence 5 presented to the Nevada Supreme Court, was not unreasonable.

6 And Rosas cannot use the written agreement to meet the clear and convincing evidence 7 standard of § 2254(e)(1), either, because that requires that the evidence not presented to the state 8 court "could not have been previously discovered through the exercise of due diligence." As 9 mentioned above, the state trial court found that both the prosecution and the defense simply forgot
10 about the existence of the written plea agreement. Based on the record, that was not plainly 11 erroneous. And even if it were, while defendants can rely on a prosecution's belief that there is no
12 such evidence in a Brady context because due diligence is not required, see Banks v. Dretke, 540
13 U.S. 668, 695–96 (2004), the same is not true for AEDPA. Due diligence surely could have revealed 14 the existence of the document, and this bars its introduction for the first time in federal court.

15 Ground 2 provides no basis for habeas relief.

16 C. Ground 3

17 In Ground 3, Rosas argues he "was denied his rights to due process of law and a fair trial
18 under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution when the prosecutor 19 raised and impeached an alibi defense in his case in chief, thereby improperly shifting the burden of 20 proof to the defendant." (ECF No. 68, at 31). As part of Nevada criminal procedure, a criminal 21 defendant is required to provide the State with notice of any alibi that the defendant might use at 22 trial. See Nev. Rev. Stat. § 174.233. Here, Rosas did just that. (See ECF No. 68, at 31). In response, 23 the State used its opening argument, case-in-chief, and closing argument to rebut and discredit any 24 story that Rosas was elsewhere as described in the alibi notice. (Exhibit 83, at 230–35; Exhibit 104, 25 at 1664–69). The State called Rosas's putative witnesses and impeached their credibility. (See, e.g., 26 Exhibit 91, at 941–50, 1025; Exhibit 93, at 1016–25, 1050–53, 1082–83, 1123–42). Rosas did not 27 try to establish an alibi during the trial by calling any of these witnesses. The jury was not given any

1 specific jury instruction on alibis to make clear that, even though the State was calling witnesses who 2 claimed that Rosas was elsewhere during the time of the homicides and impeaching them, the burden
3 was with the State to prove all elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt.

4 To the Nevada Supreme Court and to this Court, Rosas argued that this violated both his 5 Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment rights. Rosas asks this Court to review the claim of burden-
6 shifting de novo because, in his view, the Nevada Supreme Court addressed only whether the State 7 violated Rosas's right to remain silent, not his right to a fair trial. But this particular line of 8 argument (that the Nevada Supreme Court did not address the question presented entirely) was raised 9 for the first time in Rosas's reply, not in his Second Amended Petition. That is too late. See, e.g., 10 Cacoperdo v. Demosthenes, 37 F.3d 504, 507 (9th Cir. 1994). Indeed, in his Second Amended 11 Petition, Rosas conceded that "[t]he Nevada Supreme Court ruled on this claim on its merits." (ECF 12 No. 68, at 31).

13 It is clearly established that the burden of proof may not be shifted to the defendant on 14 whether the defendant has an alibi. See, e.g., Estelle v. Williams, 425 U.S. 501, 503 (1976); In re
15 Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 364 (1970). No one disputes that. And no one disputes that it is clearly 16 established the State here had to prove beyond a reasonable doubt Rosas's presence and participation 17 in the homicide and that the State could not shift that burden of proof onto Rosas. See, e.g., Winship, 18 397 U.S. at 364; Stump v. Bennett, 398 F.2d 111, 119–20 (8th Cir. 1968). The question, though, is 19 whether it was clearly established that the State shifted that burden by preemptively calling Rosas's 20 alibi witnesses to discredit them and then commenting about it at closing argument. Rosas does not 21 point to any Supreme Court case clearly establishing that, or why the belief that discrediting alibi 22 witnesses preemptively was an unreasonable application of Supreme Court precedent. Instead, he 23 points only to two appellate-court decisions. (ECF No. 103, at 80–82 (citing United States v. Purvis, 24 706 F.3d 520, 525 (D.C. Cir. 2013); and United States v. Zuniga, 6 F.3d 569, 570 (9th Cir. 1993))).
25 Both do little to support his proposition that the State's actions here ran afoul of clearly established 26 Supreme Court law about the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments. In Purvis, the language quoted by 27 Rosas actually comes from another case it is quoting, and there the Court made clear that the alibi

1 instruction was necessary because “the trial court expressing invited a weighing exercise by 2 instructing jurors to ‘analyze the testimony presented by [the defendant] in contradistinction to the 3 testimony presented by the government’ regarding the defendant’s alibi defense.” 706 F.3d at 525 4 (quoting United States v. Alston, 551 F.3d 315, 317 (D.C. Cir. 1976). In Zuniga, the defendant put 5 forth witnesses trying to establish an alibi and requested an instruction; the trial court refused. 6 F.3d
6 at 570. The court based its holding on the fact that “[a] defendant is entitled to an instruction 7 concerning his [or her] theory of the case if it is supported by law and has some foundation in the 8 evidence.” Id. (second alternation in original) (citation omitted). The decision was not about burden 9 shifting.

10 Ground 3 provides no basis for habeas relief.

11 D. Ground 4

12 In Ground 4, Rosas argues he was “denied his right to the effective assistance of appellate 13 counsel under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution when counsel 14 failed to [challenge] the prosecution’s use of a peremptory challenge to exclude a Hispanic from 15 serving on the jury in violation of Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79 (1986).” (ECF No. 68, at 34). To 16 succeed on a typical ineffective assistance of counsel claim on direct appeal, a defendant must show 17 that counsel’s representation fell below an objective standard of reasonableness and a “reasonable 18 probability that but for counsel’s unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been 19 different.” Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 688, 694 (1984). Courts evaluate a counsel’s 20 performance from counsel’s perspective at the time and begin with a strong presumption that 21 counsel’s conduct well within the wide range of reasonable conduct. See, e.g., Beardslee v.
22 Woodford, 358 F.3d 560, 569 (9th Cir. 2004). When a state court has reviewed a Strickland claim, a 23 federal court’s habeas review is “doubly deferential”—the reviewing court must take a “highly 24 deferential” look at counsel’s performance through the also “highly deferential” lens of § 2254(d).
25 Cullen, 563 U.S. at 190, 202.

26 After the prosecutor exercised his third peremptory strike to remove Rosemarie Garcia from 27 the jury, Rosas’s defense counsel “note[d] that she is the only Hispanic person on the jury” and 28

1 “challenge[d] the District Attorney’s decision to eject her.” (Exhibit 81, at 166). The prosecutor put 2 forth several nondiscriminatory reasons for striking her: that, as was common practice, when they 3 passed the jury lists around to law enforcement agencies, she got two “no” marks and “no” marks 4 were not exclusively or always used on minorities; she knew a witness in the case; she worked at a 5 store where other employees were just prosecuted for helping their friends commit theft from the 6 store; and that, when the state’s burden of proof was described, he “thought Ms. Garcia agreed with 7 that sentiment” and “saw her smile or otherwise give some acknowledgment to that.” (Id. at 166–67).
8 He also noted that “she is not the only member of the Hispanic culture that exists [on the jury] unless 9 somehow or another somebody [sic] redefines Hispanics to exclude Spanish-Basques” and that he 10 believed that were at least two Spanish-Basques and one other Hispanic with an Anglo name 11 remaining on the jury. (Id. at 167–68). The trial court confirmed the prosecutor’s perception of 12 Garcia’s reaction to the burden of proof: “There was something I thought was kind of odd, but I 13 suppose facial gestures are subject to varying interpretations.” (Id. at 169). The court ended up 14 deciding against Rosas. (Id. at 176).

15 Rosas argues that the fact that law enforcement agencies marked “no” does not say anything 16 about whether they marked no on Garcia due to her race. Rosas argues that Garcia’s “knowing” one 17 of the witnesses is unsupported by the record “because Ms. Garcia actually did not know [the 18 witness]. Ms. Garcia said only that the [witness’s name] ‘rang a bell’ but that she has ‘never known 19 him personally or anything.’” (ECF No. 103, at 94). Rosas argues that the working at a store that has 20 several employees prosecuted for theft for the District Attorney’s office did not mean anything 21 because Garcia “had no involvement in the criminal activity.” (Id. at 95). Lastly, Rosas argues that 22 the observation of her facial expression is meaningless because the State never followed-up on either 23 its meaning with Rosas or on her understanding of the proper burden of proof.

24 The Nevada Supreme Court rejected Rosas’s contention that these arguments showed that the 25 prosecutor’s given reasons were pretextual. (Exhibit 186, at 7–9). Doing so was not an unreasonable 26 application of Strickland given the weak arguments that Rosas throws against the prosecutor’s race-27 neutral justifications.

1 Ground 4 provides no basis for habeas relief.

2 E. Ground 5

3 In Ground 5, Rosas argues that he “was denied his right to the effective assistance of trial
4 counsel under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution when counsel 5 failed to move for a change of venue after a prospective juror informed the court and counsel that 6 Elko, Nevada’s white and Mexican communities were racially split as to Rosas’ guilt of the crimes 7 charged, the former favoring convictions and the latter acquittals.” (ECF No. 68, at 38). As 8 discussed above, this Court therefore held this Ground would be “dismissed with prejudice unless 9 petitioner can show cause and prejudice to excuse the procedural bar, or that this Court’s failure to
10 consider the defaulted claims will result in a fundamental miscarriage of justice.” (ECF No. 86, at 11 10). The cause and prejudices standards are discussed more fully in the discussion of Ground 1, 12 above.

13 Rosas cites Martinez v. Ryan, 132 S. Ct. 1309 (2012), to overcome this default. Martinez 14 held that “‘a procedural default will not bar a federal habeas court from hearing a substantial claim of 15 ineffective assistance at trial if’ the default results from the ineffective assistance of the prisoner’s 16 counsel in the collateral proceeding.” Davila v. Davis, 137 S. Ct. 2058, 2065 (2017) (quoting 17 Martinez, 566 U.S. at 17). The standards for ineffective assistance of counsel are laid out in Ground 18 4, above. Proving ineffective assistance at the collateral proceeding, though, is not just as simple as 19 showing that there was a meritorious claim that should have been raised. Because “[e]ffective 20 appellate counsel should not raise every nonfrivolous argument on appeal, but rather only those 21 arguments most likely to succeed[,] [d]eclining to raise a claim on appeal . . . is not deficient 22 performance unless that claim was plainly stronger than those actually presented to the appellate 23 court.” Id. at 2067 (citation omitted). If the state court failed to address the ineffective assistance of 24 counsel claim because it held them to be procedurally defaulted, as here, then the federal courts 25 review the claim de novo.

26 The State responds that Rosas failed to cite Martinez as a method of overcoming the 27 procedural default in its opposition to the State’s motion to dismiss because of procedural default.

1 Rosas admits that he “failed to list th[is] claim[] in his opposition,” but argues that this Court should 2 ignore this lapse because “this Court ordered further briefing on [whether Ground 5 overcame the 3 procedural default] and Mr. Rosas never waived this argument.” (ECF No. 103, at 97 n.24). Because 4 this Court finds that Rosas has failed to meet his burden under Martinez even if he properly raised it,
5 the Court need not address this issue.⁴

6 But Rosas’s ineffective assistance of counsel claim fails on the merits on de novo review, as 7 does the necessary claim that post-conviction counsel was ineffective for not raising the 8 ineffectiveness of trial counsel claim. Everyone is entitled to trial by “a panel of impartial, 9 indifferent jurors.” Irwin v. Dowd, 366 U.S. 717, 722 (1961). He argues that he would have been 10 granted a change of venue and because he was not, he “was tried before a jury that was not fair and 11 impartial.” (ECF No. 68, at 39). To succeed on this Ground, Rosas must show that his appellate 12 counsel was ineffective for failing to raise a “substantial” claim that his trial counsel was ineffective 13 failing to move for a change of venue, and that he was prejudiced as a result of his appellate 14 counsel’s failure.

15 Rosas is a “member of the Latino Hispanic racial group” and the “victims of the Domino’s 16 Pizza killings were white.” (ECF No. 68, at 38). His claim boils down to the idea that, if there is 17 racial tension in a town according to a single juror, then every competent attorney would file a 18 motion for a change of venue. According to one juror, the town was divided along ethnic lines as to 19 guilt and innocence, with the majority of Hispanics thinking that Rosas was not guilty and the 20 majority of whites thinking that he was. If Rosas is truly arguing that any racial divide necessitates a 21 motion for a change of venue, then O.J. Simpson should count his blessings that Rosas wasn’t there 22 to advise his lawyers. (See ECF No. 68, at 39 (“In light of . . . the presence of an all white jury, 23 defense counsel should have moved for a change of venue.”)). Perhaps, then, Rosas is arguing that 24 because the jury was not as Hispanic as it could have been, as opposed to the predominately African-25 American jury that O.J. got, the attorney should have moved for a new venue. Besides likely

26
27 ⁴ Same too with Ground 6.

1 violating the jurors' constitutional rights, such a move would be better treated as a fair cross-section 2 claim. Such a claim is not "substantial" under Martinez. Similarly, post-conviction counsel was not 3 ineffective for not raising this claim. Representing himself, Rosas's first post-conviction petition 4 raised seventeen claims for relief. (Exhibit 149). Post-conviction counsel was then appointed, which 5 filed a supplement raising two additional claims. (Exhibit 156). This race-based change of venue 6 error, subject to the deferential standards of Strickland, was not plainly more meritorious than those 7 actually raised. Therefore, Failing to raise a claim during post-conviction proceedings that trial 8 counsel was ineffective by failing to move for a change on venue in light of racial tensions is not 9 ineffective assistance of post-conviction counsel.

10 Rosas's next argument is that counsel was ineffective for not moving for a change of venue 11 in light of the fact that a majority of the jurors had heard of the case.

12 This Court previously held that this Ground "related back" to the original petition for a writ 13 of habeas corpus. (ECF No. 46, at 11). This court sua sponte clarifies that decision, and holds that 14 the pre-trial publicity argument supporting a change of venue does not "relate back" to the original 15 petition. AEDPA has a one-year statute of limitations. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d). When petitions 16 are filed outside the one-year statute of limitations, only the grounds and arguments that "relate 17 back," as allowed under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(c)'s definition of an "amendment that 18 asserts a claim . . . that arose out of the conduct, transaction, or occurrence set out . . . in the 19 original," to the original petition filed within the statute of limitations are timely. See Mayle v. Felix, 20 545 U.S. 644, 656, 663 (2005). "So long as the original and amended petitions state claims that are 21 tied to a common core of operative facts, relation back will be in order." Id. at 664; see also 3 J.
22 Moore, et al., Moore's Federal Practice § 15.19[2], pp. 15–82 (3d ed. 2004) (noting that relation 23 back ordinarily allowed "when the new claim is based on the same facts as the original pleading and 24 only changes the legal theory"), cited by Mayle, 545 U.S. at 644 n.7.

25 The original petition argued that trial counsel should have moved for a change of venue 26 based on the reasoning discussed above—i.e., racial tensions. In its response to the State's motion to 27 dismiss, Rosas cited Grounds Eight, Ten, and Seventeen of the original petition was establishing the operative facts for his current claim that “he received ineffective assistance of trial counsel when counsel failed to move for a change of venue given the racially motivated split of opinion regarding Rosas’ guilty or innocence among the Hispanic and White communities in Elko, Nevada.” (ECF No. 41, at 21). Grounds 8 and 17 were fair-cross-section challenges based on race and Batson challenges based on race, both of which combined to “prevent[] [Rosas] from receiving a fair trial by a jury of his peers.” (ECF No. 7, at 17, 37). Ground 10 was a general challenge to ineffective assistance of counsel. (Id. at 21). In his opposition to the State, Rosas characterized those claims as going to the “practicality of being of Mexican descent and being tried by an all-white jury” whose feelings of guilt or innocence “was strictly divided along racial lines.” (ECF No. 41, at 21). At the end of his discussion, Rosas mentioned the newspaper articles for the first time and added a brief characterization of the newspaper articles as being “in support of Rosas[’s] allegation of the racial divide in Elko, Nevada, as it specifically pertained to the White community’s belief in his guilt and the Hispanic community’s belief in his innocence.” (ECF No. 41, at 21). In this Court’s original order, it characterized the change of venue along racial lines, but never mentioned the newspaper articles. Thus, the consideration of the newspaper articles is limited to the extent that it addresses the common thread running between Grounds 8 and 17 of the original petition: race. Race-based facts are the same as given in the original petition. Facts based on pretrial publicity and a tainted jury pool, though, are based on an entirely different set of facts—facts that require investigation into the publicity given by the media, as opposed to the racial prejudices of the jury. Complaints based on pre-trial publicity “depend upon events separate in both time and type from the originally raised episodes” of Batson and an inadequate cross-section. Mayle, 545 U.S. at 657; see also Alfaro v. Johnson, 862 F.3d 1176, 1184 (9th Cir. 2017) (“Because Alfaro has not previously alleged facts regarding systemic delay in California’s post-conviction death penalty process, her claim does not relate back to her timely-filed petition.”).

Even if this Court were to hold that the discussions about pretrial publicity related back to the claims about fair cross-sections and Batson, the argument would fail on its merits. Courts have acknowledged that a “trial court may be unable to seat an impartial jury because of prejudicial pretrial

1 publicity or an inflamed community atmosphere.” Harris v. Pulley, 885 F.2d 1354, 1361 (9th Cir.
2 1988). But case law “cannot be made to stand for the proposition that juror exposure to . . . news 3 accounts of the crime . . . alone presumptively deprives the defendant of due process.” Skilling v.
4 United States, 561 U.S. 358, 380 (2010) (alterations in original) (citation omitted). “A presumption 5 of prejudice . . . attends only the extreme case.” Id. at 381. On federal habeas, courts have the 6 obligation to “independently examine the exhibits containing news reports about the case for 7 volume, content, and timing to determine if they were prejudicial.” Harris, 885 F.2d at 1360.

8 Rosas points to next to nothing, beyond the fact that a “good percentage” of jurors had heard 9 of the case, to justify the idea that there was excessive pretrial publicity . (See ECF No. 193, at 100, 10 102; Exhibit 81, at 55, 107–08, 111–12, 120, 124–26, 131, 134, 141). The newspaper articles 11 presented by Rosas to this Court do not raise any specter of impartiality from the jurors. (See Exhibit 12 195 at 3, 5, 7). And nothing to show that a reasonable attorney in trial counsel’s shoes would have 13 thought it better to try to temperaments of out-of-towners over in-towners who have read a 14 newspaper, but who otherwise demonstrated no prejudice against the defendant or inability to serve 15 as impartial jurors. This does not come close to meeting Nevada’s test of “publicity corrupt[ing] the 16 trial,” and thus trial counsel could have easily thought that his motion would have been fruitless.
17 Sonner v. State, 930 P.2d 707, 712 (Nev. 1996). Indeed, Rosas fails to demonstrate any prejudice.
18 Failing to raise a claim during post-conviction proceedings that trial counsel was ineffective by 19 failing to move for a change on venue in light of the crime having been in covered by the media is 20 not ineffective assistance of counsel. Therefore, Rosas cannot demonstrate cause under Martinez to 21 excuse the procedural default.

22 Ground 5 provides no basis for habeas relief.

23 F. Ground 6

24 In Ground 6, Rosas argues that he “was denied his right to the effective assistance of trial
25 counsel under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution when counsel
26 failed to investigate (1) a leading suspect in the killings and (2) a witness who could have impeached 27 Liana Marie Barraza, and therefore, failed to prepare a meaningful defense.” (ECF No. 68, at 40).

1 Ineffectiveness of trial counsel and appellate counsel are addressed using the same standards as 2 discussed above in Ground 5. To overcome the procedural hurdle under Martinez discussed in 3 Ground 5, above, Rosas needs to show that his post-conviction counsel was ineffective for failing to 4 raise the claims for the alleged ineffectiveness of trial counsel, all of which is reviewed de novo.

5 Rosas contends that post-conviction counsel was ineffective for failing to raise the claim that 6 trial counsel was ineffective for failing to investigate whether J.J. Horner committed the double 7 homicide for which Rosas was on trial. The crux of Rosas's argument is that, if trial counsel has 8 investigated Horner, he would have discovered that Horner, in violation of federal law, owned at 9 least one 9mm pistol (the same caliber used in the homicide and owned by millions of Americans 10 across the country), that Horner had been investigated for allegedly stealing dynamite from a 11 company whose employees wore blue jackets (the same color jacket likely worn by the shooter and 12 owned by millions of Americans across the country), and that Horner had been investigated for 13 allegedly threatening to use the dynamite against governmental agencies (unlike almost every other 14 American across the country, but is, safe to say, fairly unrelated to the double homicide at 15 Domino's). (See ECF No. 103, at 108). Moreover, Horner claimed that he was with Rosas on the 16 night of the homicides, so their connection might not have been good for the defense. (Exhibit 201, 17 at 3). The odds that such revelations would have influenced the outcome of the proceeding is quite 18 low, as discussed below in Ground 7, and so there is no prejudice and the ineffective assistance of 19 counsel at trial claim was weak. See Jones v. Wood, 207 F.3d 557, 563 (9th Cir. 2000) (finding 20 prejudice when the other-suspect information created a substantial probability that the state's theory 21 of guilt was wrong; Hamilton v. Vasquez, 17 F.3d 1149, 1157 (9th Cir. 1994). And because of this 22 low probability of success, post-conviction counsel was not ineffective for failing to raise the 23 ineffectiveness of trial counsel claim. Therefore, Rosas cannot demonstrate cause under Martinez
24 for this claim of ineffectiveness. And even if he could and this Court were to address the ineffective 25 assistance of trial counsel claim on the merits, it would fail for the reasons just discussed.

26 Rosas also contends that post-conviction counsel was ineffective for failing to raise the claim
27 that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to investigate a witness, Ford, whom Rosas contends 28

1 could have helped impeached Barraza, a witness of the State. Much, but not all, of Barraza's 2 testimony was corroborated by other witnesses called by the State. (See infra Ground 9).

3 In his Second Amended Petition, Rosas states that "If Ms. Ford had been called at trial she 4 and provided [the testimony that Ford and another women went to Rosas's motel room on May 24
5 between 5:00 and 5:30 am and did not see Barraza there], the jury would have had reasonable doubt 6 as to the credibility of Ms. Barraza." (ECF No. 68, at 42). Indeed, Barazza did testify that she was 7 with Rosas at a different motel throughout the evening of May 23 and the morning of May 24, except 8 for a couple of hours—roughly the time window when the State argued the homicides took place.
9 (Exhibit 100, at 1422–95). Rosas's trial counsel knew about Ford and her story. (See Exhibit 201, at 10 2–3). Rosas argues that it was ineffective assistance of counsel to not investigate that story further to 11 corroborate it and thus be able to use it to impeach Barraza or to investigate Barazza's criminal 12 record and use it to impeach her. Trial counsel, though, opted to attempt to impeach Barraza through 13 an alternative means, including questioning why she was willing to keep hanging out with Rosas 14 notwithstanding his confession to her that he committed the homicides. (See Exhibit 232, at 114, 15 117). Even assuming that these failures amounted to ineffective assistance of counsel does not give 16 Rosas relief. It is a question whether Rosas was prejudiced by this lack of further investigation—i.e., 17 whether trying to impeach Barazza's testimony with a potential inconsistency that occurred several 18 hours after the shooting and a substantial portion of time before the Rosas made the statements to her 19 that she relayed in court concerning his guilt would have a "reasonable probability that but for 20 counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different." Strickland, 21 466 U.S. at 694. As discussed in more detail in Ground 9, below, the vast majority of Barazza's 22 testimony was corroborated by one or two other people. Therefore, Rosas has not established such a 23 "reasonable probability" of a different trial outcome.

24 Ground 6 provides no basis for habeas relief.

25 G. Ground 7

26 In Ground 7, Rosas argues that the "State's failure to disclose (1) the prosecution of J.J.
27 Arnold Horner as an ex-felon in possession of a 9mm pistol during the summer of 1997, and its 28

1 consequent seizure of such 9mm pistol and destruction thereof at closure of the case and (2) the 2 investigation of Horner for stealing dynamite and threatening various persons and institutions with it
3 denied Rosas his rights to due process of law and a fair trial under the Fifth and Fourteenth 4 Amendments to the United States Constitution.” (ECF No. 68, at 43). In other words, he contends
5 that the State failed to disclose two pieces of information in violation of Brady v. Maryland, 373
6 U.S. 83 (1963): First, that J.J. Horner was being prosecuted for being a felon in possession of a 9 7 mm pistol. Second, that J.J. Horner was being investigated for stealing dynamite and threatening to 8 use it to against government entities. The Nevada Supreme Court held that the petition was 9 procedurally barred, untimely, and an abuse of the writ. (Exhibit 247). This Court then held that 10 Ground 7 was procedurally defaulted based on independent and adequate state grounds, and that, 11 after the merits issues were fully briefed, it would be “dismissed with prejudice unless petitioner can 12 show cause and prejudice to excuse the procedural bar, or that this Court’s failure to consider the 13 defaulted claims will result in a fundamental miscarriage of justice.” (ECF No. 86, at 10).

14 Rosas contends that Ground 7 is not defaulted “because in the context of considering whether 15 Mr. Rosas could demonstrate cause and prejudice, the state court decided this claim on its merits.”
16 (ECF No. 103, at 134). Brady requires the disclosure of evidence that is both favorable to the 17 accused and “material either to guilt or punishment.” United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 674 18 (1985) (citation omitted). “[E]vidence is material only if there is a reasonable probability that, had 19 the evidence been disclosed to the defense, the result of the proceeding would have been different. A 20 ‘reasonable probability’ is a probability sufficient to undermine confidence in the outcome.” Id. at 21 681; see also Kyles v. Whitney, 514 U.S. 419, 435 (1995) (“One does not show a Brady violation by 22 demonstrating that some of the inculpatory evidence should have been excluded, but by showing that 23 the favorable evidence could reasonably be taken to put the whole case in such a different light as to 24 undermine confidence in the verdict.”).

25 The Nevada Supreme Court rejected Rosas’s Brady claim in the final round of state post-26 conviction proceedings. After noting that “[e]vidence is material where there is a reasonable 27 probability that the omitted evidence would have affected the outcome of the trial,” the court held:

1 “This court has only been provided with trial transcripts for portions of days two, seven, and eight of 2 the guilty phase of the jury trial so that we cannot review the district court’s conclusion that the 3 evidence was not material.” (Exhibit 247, at 4). It quotes one of its decisions for the proposition that 4 “[t]he burden to make a proper appellate record rests on the appellant.” (Exhibit 247, at 4 (quoting 5 Green v. State, 612 P.2d 686, 688 (Nev. 1980))). It therefore rejected Rosas’s claim.

6 Contrary to Rosas’s assertion, that is not deciding the claim on the merits. Instead, that is 7 saying that the state court could not decide the claim on the merits because Rosas procedurally erred 8 by not providing it with the record necessary to make the materiality determination. Rosas argues 9 that, even if the Nevada Supreme Court did not decide Ground 7 on its merits, the “bar the state 10 court applied . . . was not independent of federal law and therefore cannot bar federal review.” (ECF 11 No. 103, at 120). But it was: the Nevada Supreme Court required Rosas to “make a proper appellate 12 record,” which Rosas failed to do because he supplied only portions of the transcripts of a few days 13 of the jury trial. That is a reasonable state procedural rule—divorced from the substance of the 14 federal grounds. If a state court were unable to require defendants to provide the plea agreement 15 when they challenge its terms or the voir dire transcript when they make a Batson challenge, 16 everything would be decided de novo by federal habeas courts. That is not what AEDPA intended.
17 Rosas further argues that requiring the trial transcript is contrary to clearly established law because 18 “‘other suspect’ evidence is ‘classic Brady material.’” (Id. at 121 (quoting Williams v. Ryan, 623 19 F.3d 1258, 1265 (9th Cir. 2010))). But “classic Brady material” does not mean “always material 20 Brady material.”

21 Rosas further argues that this procedural default can be overcome because the State 22 suppressed the factual basis for it. (Id. at 122). Rosas is correct that if the Brady material came to 23 light after the reason for the procedural default occurred and the procedural default was attributable 24 to not having the Brady material, then that would constitute cause to overcome the default. See 25 Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 488 (1986). But the default here was failing to provide the Nevada 26 Supreme Court with full trial transcripts to prove the Brady violation—the only connection that has 27 to the alleged Brady violation is that the State had to withhold some evidence for Rosas to file a 28

1 Brady claim in the first place. The State's withholding of evidence does not explain or excuse 2 Rosas's failure to provide the Nevada Supreme Court with a complete record to determine whether 3 the State's withholding of evidence violated Brady.

4 And even if the Nevada Supreme Court did rule on the merits, then this Court is limited to 5 reviewing the evidence presented to the Nevada Supreme Court or otherwise excused. See 28 U.S.C.
6 § 2254(d), (e). Because that evidence includes only portions of the trial transcript, this Court cannot 7 conclude that there is a reasonable probability that the evidence not turned over, described below, 8 would have changed the outcome. See Bagley, 473 U.S. at 681. Rosas bears the burden of proof of 9 establishing that he is entitled to habeas relief, and he has failed to meet that burden based on the 10 evidence that this Court is allowed to view. See Pinholster, 563 U.S. at 181. Again, the fact that 11 something is "classic Brady material" does not mean it is always material Brady material. While 12 there might be instances where a court would not need any trial transcripts to determine if the failure 13 to turn over some evidence had a reasonable probability of changing the outcome, the evidence here 14 is much too weak to fall into that category.

15 What is more, looking at the whole trial court record shows that the material Rosas points to 16 did not have a reasonable probability of changing the outcome of the proceedings. That Horner 17 owned a weapon of the same caliber as the one used in the murders, but which Rosas concedes and 18 the state trial court determined could not have been used in the murders, and that he stole dynamite 19 from a place whose employees wore the same color jacket as the shooter wore, is almost 20 meaningless. Evidence that Horner might have threatened to blow up governmental buildings with 21 dynamite does not do much either—in fact, it quite possibly could have been excluded under 22 Nevada's evidence code. See Nev. Rev. Stat. § 48.035. The jury was already aware the Horner had a 23 criminal history, had been incarcerated, bought and sold drugs, and was acquaintances and business 24 associates with Rosas. (See Exhibit 96B, at 1240–47). Moreover, Horner testified that he was with 25 Rosas the night of the Domino's killing. (See id. at 1247). Therefore, the incremental evidence 26 forming the basis for Rosas's Brady's claim is not material. (See also infra Ground 9). Evidence is 27 not material by virtue of the fact that it is about someone whom some thought to have committed the 28

1 crime. (See Exhibit 197). It still has to undermine confidence in the jury verdict—this evidence does 2 not.

3 Ground 7 provides no basis for habeas relief.

4 H. Ground 8

5 In Ground 8, Rosas argues that the “[a]dmission of prior bad act testimony violated [his] 6 constitutional rights to a fair trial and due process of law under the Fifth, Sixth, and Fourteenth 7 Amendments to the United States Constitution.” (ECF No. 68, at 44). In the context of a 8 conversation about how Rosas discussed Katie Riley “shorting” him on a drug transactions, a 9 prosecution witness mentioned on direct examination that Rosas said that “if [Riley] keeps doing 10 that and this and that dadadadada, he asked [the witness] if [the witness] would beat [Riley] up for 11 [Rosas].” (Exhibit 100, at 1434–36). Defense counsel then objected, and the trial judge admonished 12 the jury to disregard it. (Id.). The prosecutor then firmed up when this conversation took place, and 13 moved on. (See id. at 1437–38). Rosas argues that this constitutes “bad act testimony.” In light of 14 the fact that the State’s theory was that Rosas committed the murders partially because someone at 15 Domino’s owed him $400 for a drug debt, (see Exhibit 14, at 224–27, 238–39), Rosas argued that 16 “[t]he inference left with the jury by [the] testimony could only be that a man who is willing to have 17 a woman assaulted over a drug deal would be capable and willing to murder, or have murdered, a 18 man who owed money for drugs.” (ECF No. 68, at 45–46). He further contends that any curing done 19 by the judge’s admonition was eradicated when the prosecutor asked the witness, after that, when the 20 conversation took place. (Id. at 46).

21 In bullet-point form, Rosas then lists nine other instances of “additional bad act evidence 22 [that was] improperly admitted against Rosas.” (Id. at 46–47). These included other conversations 23 about how Riley or others shorting Rosas’s customers, that Rosas appeared to be under the influence 24 of narcotics the day after the homicides, that Rosas sold drugs, that Rosas brandished a firearm while 25 conducting drug activity the night of the homicides, that someone was physically intimidated by 26 Rosas, and that Rosas had fronted someone drugs. (See id.; see also Exhibit 88, at 657, 679–89, 699, 27 703, 713; Exhibit 91, at 826–28, 931–37, 945, 977; Exhibit 93, at 1009, 1015–20; Exhibit 96, at 1 1246, 1250–51, 1261–70).

2 The federal courts “are not a state supreme court of errors; we do not review questions of 3 state evidence law.” Jammal v. Van de Kamp, 926 F.2d 918, 919 (9th Cir. 1991). Instead, the federal 4 courts on habeas review care only “whether the admission of the evidence so fundamentally infected 5 the proceedings as to render them fundamentally unfair,” and thus constitutionally impermissible. Id.
6 Not only must there be “no permissible inference the jury may draw from the evidence,” but also the 7 evidence must “be of such quality as necessarily prevents a fair trial.” Id. at 920 (citation omitted).
8 Whether the admission of evidence violated state law “is no part of a federal court’s habeas review 9 of a state conviction.” McGuire v. Estelle, 502 U.S. 62, 67 (1991). In other words, the evidence is 10 not constitutionally suspect unless it is irrelevant and has no probative value. See id. at 68–69.

11 The Nevada Supreme Court held that Rosas’s right to a fair trial was not denied based on 12 these statements. (Exhibit 138, at 3, 6–8). This was not contrary to clearly established federal law.
13 All of the challenged testimony was admitted for a permissible purpose, whether it be to show 14 Rosas’s motive or to show that he was in the process of dealing with people stealing from him.
15 Moreover, it is not clearly established that character evidence is “impermissible” in a constitutional 16 sense. See Alberni v. McDaniel, 458 F.3d 860, 864 (9th Cir. 2006); Williams v. Neven, No. 2:14-cv-
17 1506-APG, 2016 WL 6246769, at *3 n.7 (D. Nev. Oct. 25, 2016). Indeed, some of the evidence 18 Rosas complains should not even be characterized as bad act evidence, such as the fact that he was 19 seen brandishing a gun the night of the murder.

20 As mentioned above, Rosas’s core contention for this Ground is that the Riley testimony was 21 “highly prejudicial and inflammatory.” (ECF No. 103, at 125). Not only was the jury instructed to 22 ignore that testimony, but also it served a constitutionally permissible purpose: demonstrating that 23 Rosas was willing to at least talk about using physical force when it came to money. While that 24 might have violated state or federal rules of evidence, neither are clearly established Supreme Court 25 case law about the right to a fair trial.

26 Regardless, though, of whether any of the evidence had a constitutionally permissible 27 purpose, the admission of none of it was “of such quality as necessarily prevent[ed] a fair trial,”

1 Jammal, 926 F.2d at 920 (citation omitted), and the Nevada Supreme Court's decision was not 2 contrary to any clearly established Supreme Court law.

3 Ground 8 provides no basis for habeas relief.

4 I. Ground 9

5 In Ground 9, Rosas argues that he "was denied his due process rights under the Fifth and 6 Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution because there was insufficient evidence 7 presented at trial to support a finding of guilt of the crimes charged beyond a reasonable doubt."
8 (ECF No. 68, at 47). This argument hinges on Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307 (1979), where the 9 Supreme Court held that due process does not allow a conviction if, viewing the evidence in the light 10 most favorable to the prosecution, "no rational trier of fact could have found essential elements of 11 the crime beyond a reasonable doubt." Id. at 319. The Nevada Supreme Court cited this standard but 12 held that it was not met. (Exhibit 138, at 3–6). On federal habeas review, this Court combines the 13 deferential standards of Jackson with the deferential standards of AEDPA to approach the claim that 14 the Nevada Supreme Court got it wrong with a "double layer of deference." Smith v. Mitchell, 624 15 F.3d 1235, 1239 (9th Cir. 2010). Therefore, Rosas "faces a heavy burden when challenging the 16 sufficiency of the evidence used to obtain a state conviction on federal due process grounds." Juan 17 H. v. Allen, 408 F.3d 1262, 1274 (9th Cir. 2005).

18 Rosas's petition on this front is predominately made up by pointing to what evidence wasn't 19 in the record:

20 There was no forensic evidence whatsoever linking Rosas to the crime. There 21 was no identification testimony from the sole witness at the scene describing Rosas as 22 the assailant. There was no evidence that Rosas had any prior knowledge or contact 23 with any of the victims or anyone else at the Domino's Pizza in Elko, Nevada. . . .

24 [Summarizing the State's theory that if someone wanted to talk to police 25 incognito, all they had to do was call for a Domino's delivery.] There was no
26 evidence that [the officer doing those knock and talks] ever made a delivery to Rosas' 27 residence, a place where Rosas was or to anyone Rosas even knew.

28 The Domino's killings were committed with a 9mm pistol. There was no evidence that Rosas ever owned such a pistol.
(ECF No. 68, at 48). As to the affirmative evidence, apparently, it "was largely hearsay admitted as admissions [made by Rosas]." (Id.).

That is not an accurate characterization of the evidence presented by the State against Rosas.

1 When the evidence is properly viewed, it is clear that the Nevada Supreme Court did not make an 2 unreasonable determination of fact or contravene clearly established U.S. Supreme Court case law in 3 rejecting Rosas's sufficiency-of-the-evidence claim. Eyewitness testimony of the shooting describes 4 a shooter that a jury could have reasonably found comports with Rosas. (See Exhibit 83, at 334–62).
5 Rosas admitted to his then-girlfriend that he committed the murders and asked her to provide him
6 with an alibi. (Exhibit 100, at 1425–32). Rosas also told her that one of the victims owed him either 7 $200 or $400, and $400 was taken from the cash register at Domino's, but additional sums remained.
8 (Id. at 1430–33). That $400 figure was backed up by other witnesses, and three witnesses claimed 9 that Rosas told them that someone at Domino's owed him $400 and that he killed or was going to 10 kill someone at Domino's because they owed him money. (Exhibit 104, at 1655, 1659–61). Rosas 11 was seen brandishing a pistol the night of the murders. Several people purported that Rosas was 12 with them during the time of the shooting, but the prosecution impeached them with inconsistencies 13 in their stories or outright admissions of lies—that people were willing to claim as much, but be 14 impeached, could be interpreted against Rosas by a rational jury, especially in light of the fact that 15 there was testimony that Rosas asked his then-girlfriend to lie and provide him with an alibi. (See, 16 e.g., Exhibit 83, at 230–35; Exhibit 91, at 941–50, 1025; Exhibit 93, at 1016–25, 1050–53, 1082–83, 17 1123–42; Exhibit 104, at 1664–69). Evidence was introduced showing that Rosas and another 18 person had multiple conversations in which one would ask the other, “do you think they're really 19 dead” and the other said “I made sure.” (Exhibit 104, at 1649). Evidence was introduced that a 20 Domino's delivery person would use deliveries as a way of talking to people and trying to spot drugs
21 during the delivery process, i.e., a secretive knock-and-talk, and that Rosas wanted to set an example 22 of prohibiting this kind of behavior by killing people at the Dominos. (Id. at 1656–57). Indeed, other 23 evidence was that Rosas claimed that he “wanted to make an example” of someone, and a jury could 24 have inferred that was the Domino's manager. And the idea that Rosas would kill someone was 25 solidified by testimony from witnesses who claimed intimidation or bribery. (Id. at 1658–59).

26 Lastly, Rosas complains that “the trial court never instructed the jury on [the element that the 27 defendant could have exercised control over the weapon] for a deadly weapon enhancement.” (ECF 28

1 No. 103, at 153; accord ECF No. 68, at 49). That, though, is not the issue because the question is 2 whether a rational trier of fact could have found the elements beyond a reasonable doubt. Based on 3 the evidence presented above, a rational trier of fact could have so found, and the Nevada Supreme 4 Court decision does not warrant correction under AEDPA.

5 Ground 9 provides no basis for habeas relief.

6 J. Ground 10

7 In Ground 10, Rosas argues that he “was denied his right to the effective assistance of trial
8 counsel under the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution when counsel 9 failed to object to the joinder of the controlled substances conspiracy charge (Count 9) with the 10 previous eight counts concerning the Domino’s Pizza killings.” (ECF No. 68, at 49). Nevada state 11 law allows joinder of offenses if they offenses are “based on the same act or transaction” or “[b]ased 12 on two or more acts or transactions connected together or constituting parts of a common scheme or 13 plan.” Nev. Rev. Stat. § 173.115.

14 The standards for ineffective assistance of counsel are discussed above. Rosas was 15 prejudiced, he claims, because the inclusion of count 9, which was about a drug conspiracy, 16 “highlighted to the jury during all phases of the case” his “status as a drug dealer.” (ECF No. 68, at 17 49). His status as a drug dealer was highlighted throughout the case not only because of count 9, but 18 also because it was central to the State’s explanation of his motive for the crimes. Therefore, any 19 error was harmless. See Chapman v. California, 386 U.S. 18, 24 (1967). Moreover, even if not 20 harmless, there is a very good argument that it is and that trial counsel and appellate counsel would 21 have thought not only that raising the claim would not benefit Rosas in any way, but that it would 22 hurt Rosas because he would have to endure two trials. Therefore, there could be no ineffective 23 assistance of counsel claim.

24 The claim fails for yet another reason: the Nevada Supreme Court held that a motion to sever 25 would not have been granted. (Exhibit 186, at 3). In other words, the Nevada Supreme Court 26 interpreted the Nevada state statute to not allow severance here, and therefore even if Rosas’s trial 27 counsel had moved for severance, it would not have worked. Therefore, he cannot demonstrate 1 prejudice. State court determinations of state law are not proper subjects of federal habeas petitions.

2 See Estelle, 502 U.S. at 67–68 (“[I]t is not the province of a federal habeas court to reexamine
3 state-court determinations on state-law questions.”). Not only is the state court’s interpretation 4 outside the scope of this Court’s review, but also the interpretation is reasonable based on the 5 interrelatedness of the drug conspiracy and the double homicide in furtherance of Rosas’s drug 6 business.

7 Ground 10 provides no basis for habeas relief.

8 Conclusion

9 Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Rosas’s petition for a writ of habeas corpus 10 is DENIED on the merits, and this action is DISMISSED with prejudice.⁵

11 Because reasonable jurists would not find this decision to be debatable or incorrect, IT IS 12 FURTHER ORDERED that a certificate of appealability is DENIED. The Clerk of Court is 13 directed to enter judgment, in favor of respondents and against Rosas, dismissing this action 14 with prejudice.

26 ⁵ A petitioner may not use a reply to an answer to present additional claims and allegations that are not 27 included in the federal petition. See, e.g., Cacoperdo v. Demosthenes, 37 F.3d 504, 507 (9th Cir. 1994).
28 To the extent that Rosas has done so in his federal reply, this Court does not consider these additional claims and allegations.
